1. By the end of September 1953, constructional work at the East German Academy of Sciences' Miersdorf Institute was at a standstill, although as yet none of the projected main buildings has been completed, and at the present state of construction no serious scientific research work is possible.

2. The major pieces of equipment required have not yet arrived, nor is it known when they can be expected.

3. At Miersdorf, the Academy of Sciences had gone ahead with additional constructional work without securing the prior approval of the Soviet Control Commission. The Russians have now made their displeasure quite clear to the Academy.[1]

1. [ ] Comment: This probably refers to extensions to buildings in excess of the original plans approved by the Russians. The Academy started construction earlier this year on these revised plans, without having the extensions first approved by the SKK. 25X1
